Gilmore Crosby

author, father, Organization Development (OD) master practitioner, and engaging public speaker

Last year, Monika Stütze-Hebel and Klaus Antons, both themselves Lewin fans and authors (see below) were lucky to meet Gilmore Crosby, an American specialist in a kind of group dynamic training quite close to Kurt Lewin and his immediate followers' original version of the T-Group Method. A very special aspect is that one of those followers, Ronald Lippitt, was from the 1950s to the 1980s the teacher and mentor of Robert P. Crosby, Gilmore's father. So, this is a chance to experience group dynamics in its very original version and in its close connection to Organization Development, strictly based on Field Theory.

We were happy to invite Gilmore Crosby for a week of training. The formal conditions are the same as for trainings within the DGGO: five days, inhouse; changing between T-Group with a maximum of 12 members, small groups and lectures. The training will be conducted in English; a reasonable English is a condition for taking part as well as an uninterrupted presence. As there will be almost no native English speakers, it will be a shared fate and a challenge for the international participants.

OBJECTIVES OF THE TRAINING ARE – IN ADDITION TO THE “USUAL ONES”

- You will experience thoroughly a sort of group dynamics close to the original concept of Lewin and his followers, tested through years of action research, and differentiated from the development group dynamics took in the last 50 years in Germany and Europe.
- You will acquire a new look, a new framework of reference for implementing your training activities, your work as consultant, supervisor, coach and organization developer.
- You will re-learn being a participant (after many years of being trainer), a good training in role flexibility (a quality we expect from our participants...), connected with a training in being a peer among people you know as colleagues in the DGGO.
